

New DOE "E-Training System"

Effective June 30, 2005 the Department of Energy will transition from the existing Energy Online Learning Center (OLC) Learning Management System (LMS) to the government-wide E-training system. This transition will result in the inability to access the current OLC after June 24, 2005. Employees are encouraged to complete any online training currently in progress by this date. Further communications on the new system will follow with access and log-in information.

The new E-training system will feature enhanced functionality over the current OLC. New functionality to meet learner as well as organizational specific needs will be phased-in over the next several months. This continues to be a corporate system available to all DOE employees Department-wide. The overall goal of the E-Training initiative is to create a premier e-training environment that supports the Department's workforce through one-stop access to high quality e-training products and services that advance accomplishment of the agency's mission.

Any questions or concerns should be addressed to the EOLC Help Desk at 202-586-3607.
